Description of the book

An ode to a potential union, a lament for a lost citizenship and a celebration of life, theatre director Tim Luscombe's comic diary – witty, charming and always enlightening – sees him coming to terms with unfamiliar people-places-and-things in the cosmopolitan bubble of Berlin, grappling with a referendum, adapting Jane Austen's Emma and learning 7 different ways to say 'the'.

About the Author

Tim Luscombe is a writer, director and European. Born in London, he has worked and homed in many European countries and has now settled in Berlin, where he lives with his partner. His plays and more recently a book celebrate Europe as they attempt to define European identity. Before concentrating on writing, Tim worked as a director in the theatre. As well as being responsible for plenty of plays in the West End and on Broadway, he ran the London Gay Theatre Company in the 1990s.
